RKMA first wrote about the Internet (then called Arpanet) in 1984. Consumer Use of the Internet & Mobile continues our assessment of the sector.

Providing insight into the 230 million U.S. adult Internet users, Consumer Use of the Internet & Mobile 2024 assesses online activities and content, e-commerce spending, mobile access to the web, apps, and more.

Internet and mobile-media market data are scattered throughout a myriad of sources. This handbook compiles top-line consumer Internet use and expenditure data into a single easy-to-use reference, with information sourced from top research organizations. Market data is presented along with analyses of trends and projections on how Internet use will evolve. The handbook also assesses mobile Internet access and apps.

Select topics include accuracy of online information, blogs, consumer reviews, digital music, digital video, gaming, photo sharing, privacy concerns, security concerns, social media user demographics, the Metaverse, and the Internet of Things.

Among the statistics presented are monthly traffic visits for over 3,500 consumer websites.

Along with top-line data, the handbook provides over 1,200 links to additional resources for more in-depth assessments.

Consumer Use of the Internet & Mobile Web 2024 serves as both a strategic planning guide for business executives in all sectors, from portals and content developers to marketers and researchers, as well as a comprehensive reference for academic libraries.
